MOTOR BOAT BURNED

Mr. Miller's Motor Boat Takes Fire Out in the Bay and Occupants Have to Take to the Water

On Tuesday morning Mr. Miles Miller took Mrs. Reiffenstein from Mr. Miller's camp to Thompson's point and was returning to the camp and was about half a mile off shore when a small explosion occurred under the gasoline tank. Immediately the boat was enveloped in flames and became so hot that the occupants had to take to the water. In the boat were Rev. and Mrs. Kidd and baby, Mr. Douglas Jemmett, and Messrs. Miles and Arthur Miller. Mr. F. F. Miller at the camp noticed the accident and at once put out to the rescue with a skiff and a small motor boat coming along also assisted and everyone was taken ashore little the worse for their experience. The life preserver cushions with which the boat was equipped, undoubtedly saved two, if not three lives. The accident was probably caused by the connections between the gasoline tank and engine becoming loosened allowing gasoline to leak into the boat and was probably fired by the magneto. On Monday evening during the storm, while Mr. Miller was making the dock the boat bumped pretty heavily and the connections were probably loosened then, but as the gasoline was turned off at the tank the leak was not noticed. The boat was burned to the wreck to shore to save the engine which apparently is not much injured.

The 31st Annual Excursion of

Through Special Train both

Remember the date.

The Windsor Hotel, Belleville, which has been managed by Mr. James Ketcheson for many years, is now passing into the hands of Mr. Chas. F.
Robinson of Trenton. The property, which is owned by the Wilson estate,
is being purchased by Mr. Robinson.
He has made a success of a hotel in Trenton, which he has turned over to the former owner.

Reports issued by the Department of agriculture of the three prairie provinces indicate that this year's crop will be a record-breaker. Those coming from all points in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, show the crops exceptionally well advanced. One farmer, E. Cutts, near Aldersyde, Alta., has oats already forty-two inches tall and well headed out.

Miss Pauline Johnston, the poetess,
is very ill in an hospital in Vancouver.
A committee has brought out her latest book, "Keep the Wolfe Away," and is trying to interest the friends of the poetess to purchase it, all the funds being applied to her necessities. The book autographed, costs two dollars,
and can be secured from the Pauline Johnston Trust Fund of Vancouver.
B. C. Miss Johnston cannot continue her literary work, owing to being unable to lift her arm for any length of time.

It is more and more apparent that both political parties are lining up for a general election in the fall of 1913.
Whether the "tip" has gone out or not, each party organization has received instructions to look carefully after the lists so as to be ready for any surprise which the government may spring. In view of Mr. Borden's promise that he would submit his naval policy to the people nobody can understand how he can adopt a policy of contribution with a more vigorous naval programme later on without a general election. The programme as now outlined is that the government will come back in the fall with its programme, submit it to parliament,
introduce and pass the redistribution
bill and then go to the country in September of the next year.

BY CHARLES GARVICE

Author of "The Verdict of the Heart," "A Heritage of Hate," "Nell of Shorne Mills," "Paid For," "A Modern Juliet," Etc.

"Very," he assented. "Is it a special occasion?"

"Why, yes. The Letchfords are dining with us to-night. Had you forgotten?"

"Ah, yes!" he said, apologetically. "I've been busy and—Any news, Vivienne?"

It was the question he always asked when returning home, however short his absence.

Vivienne shook her head, and, as he sighed, she asked:

"Why are you so anxious, dear? Nothing can have happened to them."

He looked doubtful and troubled. "I don't know. Sometimes I'm afraid—it was an open boat; and—I should have thought one of them would have written."

Vivienne smiled reassuringly. "I'd trust them in a cockle-shell, Sutcombe!" she said.

The Letchfords came up to time. They sat down to dinner. Strangely enough—and yet not so strangely, for the Letchfords often thought of their dead friend—the conversation strayed indirectly toward the subject of Vane's death and Julian's succession. "I met Sir Chandos Orme to-day—you know him, I think, Sutcombe?" said Letchford.

Sutcombe nodded. "A little; who doesn't?"

"You'll be sorry to hear that he is breaking up—at last! I saw him in St. James Street, and scarcely knew him; and he did not know me at all. He was tottering along like an old man, his wig all askew, the enamel, or whatever it is, cracked and in blotches on his face, and his lips twisted into a fatuous, senile grin. A most dreadful wreck, poor old chap! What you call an awful warning and example. I crossed over and got hold of his hand—it shook with palsy—and contrived, after some minutes, to make him recognize me. I wanted to enquire after his daughter, Judith."

"And how is she?" asked Lady Letchford, gravely.

Her husband shook her head. "Very bad, I gathered. She has never got over the shock of"—his voice dropped—"of that terrible tragedy at Lesborough. I don't think you know much of my poor friend, Vane Mannering, Sutcombe?"

Sutcombe colored and fidgeted. He had not been authorized to proclaim that Vane still lived.

"I—I have met him," he said.

"An awfully good fellow—one of the very best," said Letchford, with a deep sigh. "He had a very short innings; and they weren't particularly happy ones. There was some cloud—There's a kind of ban on the Lesborough family, and I'd hoped he'd broken it; but he didn't and the present man doesn't look as if he would."

back with a low cry. For Vane and Nina stood there.

He closed the door sharply, then got hold of a hand of each, and all of them were talking at once, the two men laughing in the nervous way in which men try to conceal their emotion, and Nina standing silent, but with the happy tears in her eyes.

"When did you come back?" Sutcombe was at last able to enquire.

"To-day—this moment. We sent the luggage to the Carlton and came on here. All the dinner eaten?"

"No, no!" said Sutcombe, still ringing his hand. "Just at it. And Vivienne! Can't you guess how delighted she will be, De-Lady Lesborough! And we were just talking of you! But when aren't we! But, oh, by Jove!" He stopped agast.

"There's—there are some people here you know—the Letchfords!"

Vane's face lit up, and he nodded and turned to Nina. "She knows them, though she hasn't seen them; don't you, Nina?"

"Yes," she murmured; for how often had she not listened to his story of the Letchfords' goodness to him?

"Come on," said Vane. "We're not in evening dress, but—"

"But they think you're dead," said Sutcombe, ruefully. Then his face cleared. "No, by Jove! for as luck would have it, I've just been preparing them for the fact that you are still alive!"

"And kicking!" Vane finished. "Lead on, Macduff! Poor, dear, old Letchford, how glad he'll be!"

"Give me a moment—just two moments. You stay outside the door till I give the word; you'll know when to show up!"

When he returned to the dining-room Vivienne saw from his face that he had "heard news," and she uttered a low cry. But he addressed himself to Letchford.

"You asked me just now, Letchford, to tell you where Lesborough is, if he was not killed that night, as you concluded; I couldn't tell you a few minutes ago, but I've heard news, and I can now!"

Vivienne rose, supporting herself by the table.

"Sutcombe! You have seen them! Oh, where are they?"

"Here, Lady Vivienne!" came Vane's voice in response, as he and Nina entered: Nina with a cry, that was followed by one of amazement from the Letchfords and delight from Vivienne, into whose arms Nina had glided.

For hours these good people talked, one against the other, in a state of excitement which threatened to exhaust the ladies, who, after a time retired to the drawing-room and left the three men to more serious conversation.

Vane stood looking with an anxious, doubtful enquiry.

"Julian!" he said, gratingly.

"Don't be frightened. Julian regarded his lustre eyes.

"Too much brandy; muttered to himself. this. How like! It is himself."

"Don't you know," said Vane, still more a look of greater doubt in his face. "I have just England. I came to find am alive. Get up, old me your hand, your coat. What is the matter? you ill?"

"His voice, exactly Julian, almost with a perfect illusion, optics. This is interesting; very."

"No, no! You can touch felt, you know. materialize to that extent. So you are going to think not! I can lay: cousin, as I raised you. He lifted the glass and draught. "It is only a quantity."

As Vane stood, regarding sternness, a foreboding was to follow, Julian Vane.

"Not gone yet? What The orthodox, the regular confession? Take it off, good ghost. And: excellent! The very dear, noble cousin. Who merited compliment in Hell—oh, no, good me! to Heaven. I forgot! gone? You will have sion?"

Vane shrank back from glittering eyes, glittering atation over the fiendish fluent words that left, gliding, working lips, shrilly, manly shame, as if he were one, and not the intended

"Good God!" he gasped, "are you mad, Julian?" "Mad? Not a whit, of my dear Vane!" retorted with a laugh, as he turned canter of brandy. "I am of the sane; for I am men who know what they get it! Lesborough family, and I'd hoped he'd broken it; but he didn't and the present man doesn't look as if he would."

Sutcombe looked up quickly. "You don't like him?" he said.

Letchford colored at the direct appeal.

"Well, no," he replied, reluctantly.

"There was never any doubt of your Lord Lesborough's death, I suppose?" asked Sutcombe; and it was now Vivienne's turn to frown at him.

"Eh? What?" said Letchford, much startled. "Why, no; how could there be? We saw—or as good as saw—him die." There was a moment's pause, then he added: "By the way, now you ask the question, there is one person who refused to believe that he was burnt—old Lady Fanworthy. But, then, as everybody knows, she is the most eccentric woman in the kingdom."

"I'm not sure that her incredulity in this case proves her eccentricity," said Sutcombe.

"Eh? What?" repeated Letchford, amazedly. "I was there, you know, when the terrible affair happened—"

"And saw Lord Lesborough's body?" put in Sutcombe.

"No; no one could see that," replied Letchford, in a low voice. "But there was enough to identify him. There was the coat, a fragment of it, and the buttons—"

"He might have left the coat there," suggested Sutcombe. "Or"—he paused impressively—"or he might have lent it to some one."

Letchford stared; then he shook his head and sighed.

"No good, Sutcombe! I wish it were! If my poor friend wasn't burnt to death that night, what became of him; where is he?"

Sutcombe leaned forward, and, with all eyes, Vivienne's fearfully, fixed on him, he retorted:

"I'm lawyer enough to remind you that you have to prove that he is dead. See, now, Letchford; you say that there was a cloud over his life; that he had once before disappeared and been lost to his friends; that, although he had succeeded to the title, and was well off—a rich man—he was still unhappy. How do you know that he didn't disappear again; that, for reasons you and I cannot guess, he did not yield to a desire to surrender the title and the money to his cousin, the heir, to whom he was, I believe, much attached—"

Letchford sprang to his feet, his face aglow.

"By heaven, Sutcombe, you—you know, you have heard something!" he exclaimed.

Sutcombe crimsoned, then turned pale.

"I—I"—he stammered; but before he could say any more the servant came to the door.

"Would you step into the library, my lord?" he said, very gravely.

Sutcombe, glad to escape, rose promptly. "Excuse me a moment, will you?" he said. "Some business connected with the theatre, I suppose."

He went out, covertly wiping the perspiration from his forehead. He had gone further than he intended, and the interruption came at a lucky moment and would give him time to think over some way of explaining away the impression he had created. He entered the library, then started haust the ladies, who, after a time retired to the drawing-room and left the three men to more serious conversation.

"The question is," said Sutcombe, gravely, "Did Julian Shore know the truth?"

"I say 'No!'" responded Vane, stoutly.

"And I— Dash it all, I wish I could!" said Letchford. "But don't be guided by me. I'm prejudiced. I never liked him."

"There is only one course to follow," said Sutcombe. "You must go down and confront him, Lesborough. You will see in a moment whether he is as guilty as I deem him. Take him by surprise, and you will find—"

"That you have wronged him!" broke in Vane. "I'll go down tomorrow. If I find that he is innocent, then I will share half the estate with him, with my wife's full and free consent. I can't give him the title; that"—he paused—"is not mine to give. But anything else— You will find I am right, Sutcombe."

CHAPTER XXVI.

The following day Julian Shore was sitting in the library. Though the weather was warm, a fire had been lit, and he had pulled the arm-chair close to it and was crouching over it, with his thin, white hands held to the blaze. If there were, indeed, a ban on the house of Lesborough, that ban was resting very heavily on the present bearer of the title; for Julian Shore looked the most wretched and unhappy of men.

It was of Judith, and almost only of Judith, he thought as he bent forward, his dark eyes fixed gloomily on the fire. Of Vane he thought not at all. Vane had been in the way both of his passion and his greed for rank and wealth and power, and— Vane was removed. Judith, only Judith, sat enthroned in the mind behind the sombre brow.

Even Lady Fanworthy's enquiry, almost anxious enquiry, for Deborah did not trouble him. Deborah had disappeared on the day of the fire; but her disappearance had not moved him. It was probable, he thought, that the reason for her absence which he had given was not far from the truth; she had, in all likelihood, gone to a relative. The loss of her services was felt by him occasionally, he missed her now and again; but he was as indifferent to her fate as he had been to that of the cat he had suffocated, as he had been to the death of Vane.

Judith; how to force her to keep her pact. He was now the Earl of Lesborough, or, at least, would soon be the acknowledged master, where once he had been the dependent. He had performed his part of the contract; how should he force her to fulfil hers? His mind was at work on the question all day, and every day, and his thin, bloodless lips now formed her name inaudibly. He rose, presently, his lips twitching, and, taking a spirit stand from the sideboard, he poured out some brandy, and drank it slowly, meditatively.

He paused, and looked towards the door, and muttered in quite a matter-of-fact voice:

"That was like Vane's. Strange!" He sank into the chair and leaned back, with closed eyes, the white lids gleaming in a ghastly fashion from the dark shadows which encircled his eyes; but suddenly the lids flickered. The door had opened, and a step—so strangely like Vane's—was heard in the room. He raised his lids, heavy with insomnia, and, without moving his head, turned his eyes, sider's—and later that night, his own rooms. But you die! Not you! You are one of those fools who are called horrible men!"

The sweat stood thickly on his forehead; the horror of it almost intolerable. He tried to laugh derisively.

"Julian!" broke from his madness—stark, raving. You—you could not have—"

Julian took the glass from his hand and drank.

"Couldn't I? Not for the estates, perhaps. I was badly enough, but I'm not sure, that I'd have killed you for them. Murder, after all. But I was thinking more badly than I title and the estates. I guess? You dull ghost, phantom! I wanted the once loved, and who still—Judith!"

"Judith!" echoed Vane, fled whisper.

Julian laughed.

"Judith! Why is she n want her! She will not will not rob me of my p her love! No, no! The c too serious. Murder! Y murder. And did I shrin And am I to be robbed—"

He staggered, and, mal chair, fell into it, his h his breast, his long, thi tended as if to clutch thing.

"Vane!" he cried.

"Murderer!" said Vane, Julian struggled to his held out his hand, with laugh.

"Is it you? No ghost, self!" he faltered, thickly

"Yes, it is I!" said V and yet with the pity on the insane, criminals th may be.

"Then—then you esca Julian. "How? I am glad But—how?"

"Deborah, the deaf-m Vane, huskily. "She s wrapped my coat round hound! The woman who to you gave her life—"

His voice broke, then the laugh of the insane.

His voice sank, and he laughed.
"Pardon! You will admit my claim to her. I am going. You will not see me again. When a man loses, as I have lost, after such a struggle, effort, he should efface himself. I admit that. I am going, and you will not see me or be troubled by me again."

He walked, quite steadily now, toward the table.

"Will you allow me to use a telegraph form? Thanks."

In horrified silence Vane drew back and watched him. He took a form from the stationery stand, and, after a moment's thought, wrote a message, very plainly and distinctly.

When he had finished he rose, looked at Vane with a calm, cool, indeed critical gaze, then with a smile
said:

"Thanks! Good-bye!"

Vane watched him as he went out of the room, then sank into a chair
—not the chair in which Julian had sat—and buried his face in his hands.
How long he sat he knew not then or ever; but, suddenly remembering the unhappy wretch, he sprang to his feet and hurried into the hall.

He almost ran into the arms of Prance, who uttered a yell of amazement and fear, calling on his name:

"Lord Lesborough!"

"Mr. Julian!" cried Vane.

"Mr. Julian! Lord Lesborough!
His lordship went out a quarter of an hour ago! But—but—oh, lord, who are you, sir? Oh, my lord, is it you, is it you?"

The whole household was in confusion. The clamor of tongues, the cries and screams and tears of relief and thanksgiving so confused Vane that he was thwarted in his intention of following the unhappy man. But at last he got a carriage and drove to the station, to find that Julian had departed by the train which had left a few minutes before Vane arrived.

CHAPTER XXVII.

"Decima!" screamed Polly, when,
with the merest apology for a knock,
Nina entered the familiar rooms in Percy Street, the room in which she had found loving shelter in her time of need, the room in which she had trimmed hats and bonnets, and afterwards—oh, great achievement!—
written plays for the members of Mr. Harcourt's company! "Deci-ma!" and Polly, with the tears in her eyes, hugged her dear friend, never dearer than in this moment of her return. "How well you are looking, and how—how— Decima, something has happened to you! Something that's altered you in a way that I can't describe. You never looked so happy, and with such a light in your eyes, not even on the first night of the play! Sit down!
Take your things off! Let me give you another kiss, you dear, sweet thing! And now tell me all about it!
The voyage! The adventures you hinted at! Did you find that mysterious island—why didn't you tell me more about it? Did you find it,
and is that what makes you look so heavenly radiant and running over with joy?"

"Yes, I found it, Polly," replied Nina, "but it was something else I found that makes me so happy.
You'll never guess! Come closer and I'll—I'll whisper!"

Polly knelt beside her, and Nina,
blushing like a schoolgirl, whispered
one word, at which Polly shrieked:

"What! A husband! Decima! Who —who is he? Tell me quick, quick!"
And when Nina had told her that,

marriage—Polly, all a-heap on the floor, could only stare at her open-mouthed with wonder, delight and awe.

"Married, married all the time!
And to an earl! And you are a countess! Lady Lesborough! Oh, poor Lord Sutcombe!" Nina laid her hand on Polly's lips. "A countess!
and been one all the time! And here was I treating you as if you were a mere nobody, just like myself! And yet, somehow, I always suspected—"

"That I was a princess in disguise! 'Changed at my birth with the rightful owner,' as the Irishman said. You dear, foolish Polly!
As if it made any difference who and what I am! And—and I think you will like my husband, dear."

Polly emitted an "Oh! Like him. I —shall be afraid. An earl, a real English earl. De—I mean, Lady Les-borough!"

"You dare! 'Decima,' if you please.
Oh, no, you won't be afraid of him.
What nonsense! You are not afraid of Lord Sutcombe!"

"Oh, but he's only a viscount, or whatever it is, and yours is a real, belted earl!" explained Polly, with delicious naivete. "What is he like, Decima?"

Nina laughed softly, and her eyes grew dreamy and fond.

"He is tall and very straight, with broad shoulders; and he is very strong and good-looking; quite bronzed and tanned, with eyes that — She broke off with a laugh at herself. "Oh, he is a son of the gods—not our gallery gods, Polly, but the Olympian ones; 'a model of grace, and full of virtue,' but his chief one is that he condescends to love
poor little me!"

Polly looked up at the radiant face, the graceful figure, and, laughing, tossed her head scornfully.

"As if he could help it! I'd like to see any man who could! Married!"

FOR THE WOMAN WHO THINKS AND FEELS.

Some women complain that they periodically suffer from dull and heavy feelings, or dizziness in the head, nervousness, pain and bearing-down feelings which should not occur to the normal healthy woman. But most every woman is subject to these pains at some time in her life, due to abnormal conditions in life, such as corsets, over-taxed strength, bad air, poor or improper food, wet feet, sluggish liver, etc. A regulator and female tonic made from native medicinal roots with pure glycerin, and without the use of alcohol, called

MRS. DONA M. MARTIN, of Auburn, Nebr., Route 1, Box 84, says: "I thought I would write you in regard to what your medicines have done for me. I have used them for thirty years for female trouble and general weakness with the very best result, and they have saved me hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills. I buy the 'Favorite Prescription' and 'Golden Medical Discovery' and take them together. I never was disappointed in your remedies and take pleasure in recommending them to any suffering lady. I am now almost fifty years old; at forty-five I took your medicines, both kinds, and I passed that period very easily and left me fat and healthy. I feel like a young girl. If any lady cares to write me, I will gladly tell her more about the good work of your medicines."

CABBAGE "YELLOWs."

Disease That Is Likely to Cause Great Loss to Vegetable Growers.

So far as known, cabbage is the only crop affected by the form of wilt known as "yellows" or "yellow sides," says a bulletin of the United States department of agriculture. The plants usually show the characteristic symptoms in about two to four weeks after they are set in the field, but often the disease appears early in their growth in the seed bed. The outer and lower leaves are the first to show the signs of

Good Grape Trellis That May Be Too Expensive For Commercial Use.

A grapevine trellis described by the Rural New Yorker, from which this cut and this description are reproduced, has a middle wire which goes through holes in the posts. The middle slot sets down over the middle wire, while the two outside wires run through slots in the cross arm two inches from the ends. The cross arms are 1 by 4 inches for all but end cross arms, which are 2 by 4 inches. The cross arms are nailed to the posts and should also be braced by wire running from the ends of the cross arm and then down around the post eighteen or twenty inches below the arm. The stem of the vine is brought to a height a little above the level of the middle wire and tied to it.

The shoots developing from these grow out and over the outside wires, making a canopy, the fruit hanging in a natural position beneath and protected from the sun. This trellis simulates the position of the wild vine more nearly than any other. (The growth is out of the disease. The whole leaf may first turn yellow between the veins and around the margins and then later brown, as if scorched, and finally drop off, or only one side of the leaf may dry up, while the other half remains normal. This latter symptom is the more usual and is a distinguishing characteristic of the disease. Little or no wilting of the plant is then apparent, and for that reason "yellows" is a better descriptive term than wilt. The lowest leaf is always the first to drop off, and this is followed by the next above until only a bare stalk is left, supporting a small imperfect head or none at all, depending upon the age of the plant when it became diseased.

Subsequent to the dropping of the leaves short sprouts from one-half inch to one and one-half inches long sometimes grow out between the leaf scars. Browning of the woody portion of the stem is another characteristic of wilt.

The seed should be disinfected with formaldehyde (one-quarter pint to seven gallons of water, leaving the seed in the solution about fifteen minutes, then washing and drying). Wilt has been found to occur in many seed beds, and for that reason manure and soil known to be free from the disease should be used. Sterilization of the seed bed should be practiced whenever possible. It has been found that even though the seed bed has been sterilized and noninfected plants obtained they may become diseased later if planted out in infected soil.

The plants evidently become diseased when quite young, and many can be detected before planting. Such should be pulled out and destroyed. Do not allow stock to roam at will over the fields. When water is used for setting it should be taken from wells instead of from drainage ditches.

Crop rotation should be practiced. The rotation should cover a period of four to eight years.

Keep Flies From Sheep.

The fly will make its appearance in midsummer. The fly aims to deposit its eggs within or close to the nostrils of the sheep. This is accompanied by no pain to the sheep. The eggs hatch in a few weeks, and the little worm ascends the nostrils, making the poor animals almost wild with nervous distress. The best remedy is a little pine tar smeared on the nose. It should be frequently applied. By pouring a little tar in the feed troughs and sprinkling it over with fine salt and wheat bran the sheep will coat their own noses. There is a good way where the flock is large.

Still a Chance.

"So you think my son won't do."
"I have tried him for three months now," said the great editor, "and I fear we can't make a newspaper man out of him."
"Is his case hopeless, then?"
"I wouldn't say that. He might have in him the making of a journalist."

position beneath and protected from the sun. This trellis simulates the position of the wild vine more nearly than any other. The growth is out of the way of cultivation, good air drainage is insured, and one can pass readily from row to row. This trellis is recommended for the home vineyard. The expense of construction makes it prohibitive commercially except for fancy table varieties.

GIVE THE GARDEN A CHANCE.

The garden will help you control the high cost of living if you plant and cultivate the vegetables as they should be. By growing the living at home you will be in a position to save more of the income from what you have for sale.

For the Farmer Who Thinks.

If one extra potato were added to each plant grown in the United States the actual increase in the annual yield of the crop would amount to 21,000,000 bushels.

Last July a Missouri farmer sowed oats, corn and millet on a piece of land that had been in early oats. The early oats were used as roughage. The second crop proved highly profitable.

Hydrated lime may be needed on your farm. On acid, low, poorly drained and soils where there is a heavy crop turned under lime is generally needed in liberal quantities to make it produce profitably.

Clean, plump, selected seed, true to variety, not mixed, free from weed seed and from disease and with strong germinating power should always be planted by the farmer as a means of increasing his own yield.

Professor Watts in his address before the American Horticultural society urged the more general use of irrigation in growing vegetable crops and praised the Skinner system as marking a new era in vegetable gardening. It is an overhead system of irrigation.

Quebec Chronicle.—The cheerful among the population are coming to the front with suggestions of dire happenings that may follow the heat wave, such as a breakdown of the water supply, an epidemic of fever, or a cyclone as disastrous as the one that struck Regina the other day. The Job's comforters should keep quiet until the weather changes. The heat is as much as the ordinary person wants to bear for the present.

Vancouver Sun.—The ordinary man's heart is a pump which beats or pulsates about seventy-two times a 120 strokes, and it cuts that in two when he is 60 years of age. The normal heart pumps about six ounces of blood at every beat, or 430 ounces to the minute, thus lifting every six or seven minutes a weight equal to his own body. It bears a lot of abuse, stimulants, insufficient rest, exhausting emotions, and it bears it pretty well; but sometimes it is overdone and quits work suddenly.

Calgary Herald.—Our ignorance of our great national assets recalls one of the late George Du Maurier's cartoons. A British peer strolling through Kensington Gardens met a couple of beautiful children led by a nursemaid. He stopped the girl and inquired whose children she was in charge of? "They are yours my Lord," replied the astonished maid. "Indeed, you surprise me," returned the noble patrician, and passed on to his club. And we know about as much of the country around us as my lord did of his children.

Canadian Collier's.—The Toronto Methodist Conference has declined to be stamped into a thoroughgoing denunciation of Sunday band concerts, one of the clergymen protesting against the idea of making ten thousand commandments while people had trouble enough keeping the original ten. On no point is the average clergyman—or perhaps it would be more accurate to say the clergymen in Synod, Conference, or Assembly—more at variance with the rank and file of his church's adherents than in the matter of observance. Opposition to Sunday cars, Sunday steamboats, Sunday band concerts, and a dozen other conveniences or recreations is not to be found in the man in the pew. It comes from the man in the pulpit, and has the unfortunate effect of making the man in the pew sometimes contemptuous of the man in the pulpit, where he should hold nothing but respect. Moreover, there is to be considered the man who is neither in the pew nor the pulpit—that is to say, the man in the street, or the man in his shirt sleeves and slippers in the garden or on his verandah. What about him? He was once the boy, or perhaps the man, in the pew, and he largely out numbers men in pew and pulpit together. He is a decent citizen, and it would be a good thing if the churches could only get him back again. He was driven out by the tendency to make ten thousand commandments grow where ten grew before.

Women can't love their husbands unless they boss them, while men can't boss their husbands unless they love them.

The cyclopedia will take down

He'll gather pearly gems of thought Unless from some bookstore near by
He has a finished thesis bought.

Then some high sounding big book name
He'll call the thoughts he has collected,
And then he'll hand it to the prof
To have it rigidly inspected.

The prof will say it is a gem,
Original, profound, a prize,
While all the time he knows he tells
An educated pack of lies.

The graduate will get it off

His pop will think he's the whole thing,

And then he'll sorter settle down

Or maybe at the old grist mill
He'll learn to grind with Uncle Sam.

And if his pop leaves him a wad
He'll likely to the senate go,
And there his pearly gems of thought
He at the galleries will throw.

HITTING THE BULLSEYE.

Many miss the bullseye in the poultry biz because they don't pick a breed to fit their purpose or the market call. The new standard of perfection names thirty-three breeds with sixty-nine varieties of chickens, excepting the bantams. Some are merely ornamental; some are egg specialists, but grow a poor market carcass; others are dual purpose fowls yielding a good quantity of eggs and a fine, juicy, meaty carcass, while some lay few eggs, but belong to the beef trust.

Certain breeds have white or slate blue legs and white or pink meat, so popular across the water, while others produce that golden tinged yellow legged bon ton bird that is such a popular, delectable morsel to the American mouth.

Certain breeds lay the white egg that is the fad for eggnog in New York, while others produce the brown shell, so popular in Browning's brown bean Boston. So that in picking a breed "chuckens are not jist chuckens nor aigs jist aigs," nor is the poultry biz just one little thing, nor everything in one little eggshell.

There are many phases to poultry culture just as there are many varieties to the breed, and no man can undertake them all and succeed. Here are egg farming, broiler raising, capon culture, roasters, so many different branches, and the breeds that are specialists in these various lines.

The question is, What is your purpose in poultry? Know that first, then pick the fowl that's a specialist in your line, then know your breed and its requirements, and you'll hit the spot.

FEATHERS AND EGGSHELLS.

A western poultry journal has a circulation of 73,000, and its March number contains 232 pages. Everybody seems to take pleasure in henpecking poultry editors, and yet they crow and thrive.

Chicks running on board floors in brooder houses often get off their legs. Fresh, sandy loam as a scratch material or getting them out on the fresh earth invariably stops the trouble unless they have gone too far.

When three or four members of a family run the incubator there is about as good a chance for a big hatch as when a half dozen aunts and uncles butt in on the training of the first baby of the newly weds with a half dozen different ways of making it an angel.

Hot floors in brooders soon cripple the chicks. Top heat is nature's plan. If a chick can get its back up against its mother's breast it doesn't worry about its feet. A hot floor dries the life out of a chick's shanks and feet.

An Allentown (Pa.) fancier had twenty-two prize bantams, valued at $2,000, poisoned while at a show. The person who lets hate, jealousy or ambition to win prompt him to a deed of such villany is a menace to society and should be behind the bars, and that's where such a villain eventually lands.

When chicks are not watered regularly they crowd to the water vessel and drink too much. This upsets the digestive apparatus, diarrhea follows, and then for "dead uns." Feed little, but often, but keep fresh water always before them.

The rooster inventors are always on the job, one of the latest being the Rhode Island Whites, a breed composed of one-half White Leghorn, one-eighth White Wyandotte and three-eighths Partridge Cochins.

A "poultry special" is run through Missouri, Illinois and Iowa by the Rock Island Railroad company for the demonstration and dissemination of practical poultry information. Now, what would your great-grandma think of such highfalutin carrying on?

If you have operated that incubator according to directions and failed and tried it every other way with poor success, throw the trouble maker out before it burns you out or breaks you up.

An Alton (Ill.) negro who stole chickens when brought before court claimed the owner of the fowls had stolen his wife. His pleading the "unwritten law" and that "a fair exchange is no robbery" influenced the court to change the charge from a felony to petit larceny, and he got off with a light sentence.

Before selling eggs for hatching you should test them for fertility yourself. That is simple honesty. Selling an uncertainty for a bona fide article when you can prove its worth is just as criminal as selling what you know is crooked.

Hennequin's Infant Tablets

Save Babies' Lives. For Babies and Small Children. (Made in France.)

Dr. Hennequin's Infant Tablets saved our little girl's life. Three doctors said she "couldn't live." The Tablets cured her.—Mr. E. R. McBRIDE, Napanee, Ont.

My baby was so weak from sickness that he could hardly walk. We thought he would die. We could find nothing to help him. I was given a sample package of three Hennequin Tablets; we used them; I saw a change at once. We secured the Tablets and our baby improved every day, and is now a bright, fat, good natured boy; you could not believe he was the same child. They certainly cured my baby and saved his life. I believe them to be the best medicine ever sold for babies. Mothers if your babies are not well take my advice and try these Tablets.—Mrs. JAMES RIDDELL, Barrydale, Ont.

TIMBER IN KEEWATIN

EXPERT WOODSMAN REPORTS
ON FOREST CONDITIONS.

The timber of the Hudson Bay region (the southern part of the old district of Keewatin) is a topic that has lately become of considerable interest. Interesting observations with regard to it are found in the 1911 report of the Director of Forestry, published as part of the annual report of the Department of the Interior for 1911. These are in continuation of the Hudson Bay railway, published as Bulletin No. 17 of the Forestry Branch.

Mr. J. T. Blackford, an experienced woodsman, acquainted with the conditions in the north, reports on the conditions of the forest around Oxford House, his explorations covering some 5400 square miles of country. Of this only about 1600 square miles bears merchantable timber; on the remaining 3800 miles the timber has been burned. There is abundance evidence that the whole country was originally forested with spruce, tamarack, jack pine, balsam fir, birch and poplar, and on islands which have by their position been protected from fire are dense stands of trees two or three feet in diameter.

The areas, after the first burning, have usually been covered with dense growth of trees, but the debris left after the first almost invites a second fire. In many places fire has swept the country many times, impoverishing the soil, destroying all seed-trees, and with them all hope of a second forest. During the summer, the report states, Mr. Blackford found no commercial timber of any quantity, but he states that, except for fire, the country would be covered with timber two or three feet in diameter.

HORRIBLE DEATH OF CEMENT

Joseph Barnes, burner at a cement works, was the terrible and fatal accident Sunday afternoon at P. Something evidently went wrong with the carrier, and he fell below to see what was the matter. The machinery was not in the time. Just what he was whether oiling or repair appears to be aware of. Only the machinery was Barnes was caught. He tried to extricate himself from machinery which drew him in position was noticed a little the man was dead. He was embedded in sand clay and cement and earth could not be removed in this was blood, witness, enough to fill a pail. Some pieces of machinery removed in order to get the body out. A large cut was found in his head, and his body was covered with cuts and bruises. In the hole large enough for a man. This had evidently been caused by the hardwood slats of the machinery. His right leg was broken in places. Dr. Yeomans was called. It was his opinion that death was instantaneous. Barnes was a man, and came from New Brunswick. His wife died some three years ago, leaving him with a son, thirty-five years old. They were shipped to his old home in the fall. Deceased was a law of Mrs. A. C. Clarke, his little son, Percy, has

A FORMER "MERCHANT PRINCE" PASSES AWAY ON A POOR HOUSE COT

The people of Western Ontario were shocked a few days ago on reading in a contemporary the announcement that a former "merchant prince" of K—— had died in the House of Refuge aged 77 years. In a short biographical sketch it was observed that he was a nephew of the late Senator—— and about a quarter of a century ago was one of the big dry goods men of B——. That he should have passed away on a poor house cot is a sad but striking instance of the irony of fate. It was said that never being married he was not ruined by the extravagances and ingratitude of his family, and that not being a drinker King Alcohol never played a part in his undoing. Nevertheless, the years came and he was relieved of his wealth, and wrecked in health and wrecked in fortune he was obliged some two years ago to make that saddest of all trips "Over the Hill to the Poor House."

What stronger example than this could any man require or desire as to the desirability of a safe means of investment such as the Canadian Government's Annuity System, under which absolutely sure provision may be made by every man, woman and child domiciled in Canada against want and poverty? In his declining years, when his physical and mental powers may have failed, when in consequence he may be no longer capable of earning a livelihood or of looking after his affairs, when perhaps all those near and dear to him have passed away, he will if he has purchased a Government Annuity have the haunting fear of destitution in old age forever dispelled. That little messenger, his Annuity cheque, will go to him every three months carrying with it comfort and happiness. It will be a steadfast friend. It will never desert him.

Awake young man and young woman to your opportunity, and act on the advice of Sir Walter Raleigh given over 300 years ago, but none the less sane to-day, namely, to "use thy youth so that thou mayest have comfort to remember it when it hath forsaken thee and not sigh and grieve at the account thereof," and act to-day.

Apply to your postmaster or write to the Superintendent of Annuities, Ottawa, for information in regard to this most advantageous system of saving.

engaged in a momentous struggle the troops of the Republic United States for the integrity of Canadian territory and the honor of the British name. Congress, under President Madison, declared war on 18th, 1812, and the first land of the war continued through summer and until the Battle of the Heights and the death of Brock on October 13th, 1812.

We may well rejoice that of grace finds both "Yan" and "Brit" dwelling in happy by side and soon to celebrate peace between the two nations. We may well rejoice also that every prospect that the hour will grow into two hundred years for that matter, the reputation of that century is not even the remotest possibility.

Letting the bygones of and misunderstanding be the very fullest way, perhaps still a duty that we owe to our great actors on the stage of life one hundred years ago, brave and strong and unused not been ready to meet the hour and give their wisdom and even their lives for the country's good, or throughout the century, it has been a very different one from has been, and our position quite so satisfactory as it is.

We owe to that intrepid going soldier, Sir Isaac Brock, and to the brave and true fought and died with him 100 years ago, at least a graceful and appreciation of their devotion and an intelligent standing of how great was the service they rendered King and country.

Of both the incidents at the time of the war of 1812, we have no reason to feel ashamed. We of to-day would be ungrateful to our brave countrymen of the past, and to the spirit of achievement, any spirit of jingoism or nationalism. We can pay tribute to them quite in the spirit of the great peace celebration, remembering that what they achieved stands fast to-day, not in battle or armed forces, but in the peace and the Christian spirit of the world.

Canadians can well prepare for the coming celebration of the 100 years of peace by reading the Story of Isaac Brock, and the wreath of immortelles upon the memory of some of the bravest heroes the history of the has known.—Christian Guardian

Wm. McKenna was killed by lightning while milking at his barn at Wolfe Island, near Kingston.

Victoria Times—What's this! What's this! Our good friend, the American Consul, whom we all sincerely admire as a fine type of American citizen, actually marshalling Sir Richard McBride and Hon. D. M. Eberts in a unit to do honor to Independence Day! But that is not all. Mr. Eberts, who previous to the 21st of September last wrapped himself in the Union Jack and ranted something about "having no truck or trade with the Yankees," actually boasting that numbers of his "sisters and his cousins and his aunts," not to mention male relatives, have taken the "oath of allegiance" to Uncle Sam! Incredible!

Napanee vs. Deseronto.

On Wednesday afternoon the Napanee baseball team journeyed to Deseronto and took the ball team from the latter town into camp by the score of 20-16. The game was only a fair exhibition of ball although some good plays were made by both teams. The game was marred with petty scraps that were frequent throughout the game, the last innings being a fiasco. The game was featured by heavy batting of both teams, home runs, three base hits and doubles being in evidence throughout. Beyond a bad first and third innings when the majority of the runs were scored, the game was close, but pitchers holding the game well in hand. In Deseronto's half of the ninth, the first man at bat, batted out of order and was out. A couple of base knocks and a dead ball filled the bases. The batter then grounded to second for a force and one man scored on an overthrow, the man on first ran, to second, to third and on home. The rule, only one base on an overthrow, brought him back to second. He led off second and was touched out by the baseman but the umpire said safe. The ball was then thrown to third and the man was caught napping, and the umpire and chief Moore said the runner was out, while Johnson declared him safe. Napanee refused to play under this ruling and the game ended by a score of 20-16 favor of Napanee. It is doubtful if they could have scored for Napanee had the game well in hand and could have won when they pleased. A return game will likely be played on the 31st of July. The batting and baserunning of the roach boys for Deseronto was the feature. They take all kinds of chances and are very fast on the bases. Benson Brant and Malley made circus catches that were labelled "home runs" had they got away from them. Bert Grange supplied a corking three base smash that cleaned up the bases but was out trying to stretch it into a home run.

Lincoln and Sumner.

Lincoln was modestly proud of his stature and of the effect of the physical man, especially when actuated by noble sentiments. He used to speak of his height to every tall man he met and to propose measuring, another guileless habit of self gratification. The only refusal he is known to have received was from Charles Sumner, who was also tall and proud of his height. Sumner was worrying the president, as he often did, about some perplexing matter when Lincoln abruptly challenged him to measure. "Sumner declined," said Lincoln, "making a fine speech about this being the time for uniting our fronts against the enemy and not our backs. But I guess he was afraid, though he is a good piece of a man. I have never had much to do with bishops where I live; but, do you know, Sumner is my idea of a bishop."—Harper's Weekly.

Didn't Know How Happy He Was.

George Arliss, himself a Britisher, delights in telling stories about his countrymen, especially of the 'Arry and 'Arriet type.
"One day," says he, "I was on Hampstead heath and heard the following conversation between these purely English types:
"Said the man: 'Blow me, 'Arriet, 'ow tired I feel! Miserable too! Wish I'd never been born! Now I've been born, wish I was dead again!'
" 'What's the matter with yer?' asked 'Arriet. 'Wat yer grumblin' at? Why, 'wat on earth would yer 'ave? Yer was drunk on Monday and again on Wednesday, and I'm blessed if yer 'aven't 'ad more than enough today! If that ain't enough pleasure for yer I don't know w't is. I suppose yer want to be a downright hangel 'ere on earth!' "—Chicago Record-Herald.

No Wonder He Wouldn't Sell.

Captain Amundsen told an amusing story of one of his arctic expeditions. Several of his dogs having died, Captain Amundsen asked one of the natives in his best Eskimo if he would sell him a few dogs. To his surprise, the request was promptly refused. The explorer and the Eskimo had a long argument, the explorer pointing out that he must get dogs somehow and the Eskimo replying that they never sold them.

"Nonsense!"

Captain Amundsen exclaimed. "I have often bought dogs." The Eskimos seemed immensely astonished, and at the end of another argument Captain Amundsen discovered that instead of using the Eskimo word for "dogs" he had been asking the man to sell him some "children."

An Odd Record.

Miss Julia Moore, Sir John Moore's niece, like many very old people, was extremely proud of her age and lost no opportunity of showing it. When she was asked by a friend if she was going to see the coronation of King Edward VII she answered: "No. I have been out of London for the last three coronations, and I don't care to alter my record." What an exaltation one must feel of being able to say a thing like that!—London Standard.

BELLEVILLE "ONTARIO" SUFFERS THROUGH FIRE

Tuesday night the Belleville "Ontario" newspaper office had a "baptism of fire" and the damage sustained by the plant and the building amounted to probably $6,000.
At about 10 o'clock the fire was discovered, and when seen it had gained great headway. The flames evidently broke out in the rear of the press and job room on the ground floor of the premises. The blaze did not reach the front and business part of the establishment. The rear portion of the pressroom, where the greatest damage was done, the framework about a new press recently installed being destroyed, while the heat damaged all the presses to a considerable extent. Cases were burned and fonts of typewriters melted. One of the typesetting machines which was located in the rear part of the room was put out of commission.
The origin of the fire is unknown, and just where it started cannot be determined, as when first seen the whole of the rear part of the pressroom was in flames.
The loss to Messrs. Morton and Herity, proprietors of the paper, will be at least $5,000, which is covered by insurance. The build is the property of Mr. T. S. Carman, and it will cost from $1,000 to $1,500 to repair the damage done. This loss is also covered by insurance.

BENEFITS OF TILE DRAINAGE

A splendid example of the beneficial results of the tile drainage can be seen on the farm of Mr. Byram A. Roblin, Adolphustown. In 1910 Mr. Roblin had his field surveyed by the Physics Department of the Ontario Agricultural College. Part of the field was very wet and had never grown a full crop on the lower parts, and these wet spots had to be sown from one week to ten days later than the high places. Tile was put in this part of the field in 1911, and the remaining part was tiled this spring. The soil is heavy clay.
This spring the west half of this drained field was sown to barley and the result is a splendid stand over all parts of the field. All the seeding was done the same day, something not possible before drainage. The east half of the field Mr. Roblin is setting out to orchard and raspberries, and a part is planted with beans. Everything is thrifty and in fine growing condition. The beans over the drains put in last year are much more advanced than where the drains were just put in this spring. As it takes from one to two seasons for the tile to get working their best, the full benefit can not be seen this season, but the increase in crop this year will more than pay for the cost of drainage. In fact, without the tile Mr. Roblin says that he would have been unable to seed this field. The cost of draining this twenty acres was less than $200.
Any farmer who wishes a drainage survey made on his farm can have it done by applying to Mr. G. B. Curran, of the Agricultural Office, Napanee. Applications should be made at once.

Montreal Live Stock.
MONTREAL, July 15.—At the Montreal Stock Yards west end market, the receipts of live stock for the week ended July 13 were 1700 cattle, 1200 sheep and lambs, 1110 hogs and 700 calves, while the offerings on the market this morning were 550 cattle, 600 sheep and lambs, 400 hogs and 175 calves.

Owing to the continued very warm weather and the more liberal supplies of cattle coming forward, for which the demand is limited, a weaker feeling developed in the market, and prices scored a further decline of fully 25c to 50c per 100 pounds since this day week. Even at this reduction buyers showed little or no disposition to operate, owing to the fact that the hot weather has driven so many people out of the city, the consumption of beef, therefore, having fallen off considerably. Choice steers sold as high as $7.50 per 100 pounds.
Hogs were strong, and prices advanced 5c to 10c per 100 pounds since this day week, and the prospects are that they will go higher, owing to curtailed supplies. Today's offerings were light, only 400 head on the market, for which the demand was good. Selected lots sold at $5.50 to $3.70 per 100 pounds, weighed off cars.
There was no change in the condition of the market for small meats, prices being about steady, but the demand for all lines was slow, as buyers generally were not disposed to operate freely.

Not Quite.

A rancher returned from a year's trip through the east to find that a one time neighbor of his, a man noted for his perfect patience, had been having a siege of bad luck. Upon hearing the news he immediately sought out the neighbor to condole with him.

"Well, John," he said after greetings had been exchanged, "I hear you lost all of your timber through the forest fires."

The other man nodded.

"And they say that the river cut off your best bottom land, that your boys all died of cholera, that your wife and children have been sick and that they have now foreclosed the mortgage on your other place."

John nodded again. "Yes, it's all true," he said, looking about him at what had once been his prosperous farm, "all true. Why, sometimes I get almost discouraged."—Ladies' Home Journal.

An Optimist.

The late W. Bayard Cutting, said a member of the Century club of New York, was an optimist himself and a firm believer in optimism.

Once during a disastrous strike he rebuked my pessimism with a story.

"A Mississippi farmer," he said, "was inundated by the spring floods, and one day while his farm was under water a friend found him laughing and joking in a barber shop.

"'George,' said the friend, 'the flood's hit you terrible, hasn't it?'"

"'Oh, yes,' answered the farmer, 'the flood's hit me, there's no denying that.' Then he smiled and added: 'But out in my wheatfield this morning I landed eight of the finest catfish Mississippi ever turned out. We had 'em fried for breakfast, with waffles. Friends, can you beat catfish and waffles to begin a cheerful, optimistic day on?'"—Washington Star.

A Parable.

Two men stood watching a steam shovel at work. With a clatter and a roar the shovel bit into a steep bank, closed on a carload of earth and dumped it onto a waiting freight train.

"It drives me wild," said the first onlooker, "to see that monster taking the bread out of good men's mouths. Look at it! Why, it's filling up those fat cars faster than a hundred men with picks and shovels could do it."

But the other onlooker shook his head and answered:

"See here, mister; if it would be better to employ a hundred men with picks and shovels on this job wouldn't it be better still, by your way of thinking, to employ a thousand men with forks and tablespoons?"—New York Tribune.

A START WITH CHERRIES.

Location of the Orchard and Character of the Soil Points to Be Considered.

Two very important points in cherry growing should be studied closely before going into the business. The first is the location of the orchard. The cherry should be planted on high, rolling, well drained soil, for the trees will not thrive on wet, soggy land. A rich loam interspersed with sand is the ideal soil, as it warms up early and gives life and vigor to the tree.

The cherry is easily grown. It is attacked by few insects. Rabbits seldom molest cherry trees. In preparing the soil I advise heavy manuring, deep plowing, with thorough cultivation the year before planting. Use two-year-old trees, well branched, and plant eighteen feet apart, giving thorough cultivation for three years.

After that seed to clover and when your orchard comes into bearing mow all grass and weeds a couple of times during the season. Leave the grass on the ground to form a mulch. It will have a tendency to hold moisture and also help to keep the ground loose. The less a cherry orchard is plowed after it comes into bearing the better, as the feeding roots are very near the surface. Roots broken off are not quickly replaced, as the cherry is one of the most backward of fruit trees in putting out new growth where old growth has been broken off.—Orange Judd Farmer.

A Cook's Accidental Discovery.

One of the best ways of cooking potatoes was accidentally discovered through the unpunctuality of a train. When the line from Paris to St. Germain was opened the first train carried an official party for whom lunch was ordered. The meal was fixed for noon, and shortly before that hour the potatoes were put on to fry. A few minutes afterward a message came that the train would probably be delayed for an hour, so the potatoes were taken off the fire, but left in the pan. Then came a second message, "Train just arriving," and the potatoes were hurriedly put back to fry again. When the party sat down to lunch the potatoes were brought on with the steak. Each chip was then found to be blown out like a small, crisp, golden balloon, to the delight of the guests. The cook without knowing it had invented pommes de terre souffles.

A Judge Recalled

The Result of a Friendly Suit In Court

By F. A. MITCHEL

George Jernegan, a student of medicine at a southern university, having reached that stage of his studies (anatomy) wherein he needed to dissect human bodies in order to see for himself the muscles, arteries, bones and other parts that constitute the machine, man, found to his discomfiture that the university authorities were unable to provide him with a subject. Not willing that his career as a sawbones should be nipped in the bud on this account, he resorted to a method which was once much in vogue among medical students, but which is now considered to be obsolete—he robbed a grave.

A young man named Blackiston had distinguished himself as a law student. It was considered that the day would come when he would make a second Daniel Webster. But, whether he studied too hard or his precociousness meant a disordered brain, he went the way of most prodigies—he broke down. One day he was found with his head on a pile of lawbooks unconscious. Doctors were called in who prescribed all sorts of treatment, from hot water at the feet to a bath in ice water, without restoring the patient. He remained in a comatose condition for many days, the action of the heart apparently growing weaker each day till at last the physicians in attendance could not detect even a flutter. So he was pronounced dead, was buried, and the legal world regretted that the profession had lost a coming shining light.

Now, Jernegan was looking for a subject about the time that Blackiston was buried. The night after the funeral the former went to the cemetery, dug up the corpse and, putting it in a gunny bag, carried it to the dissecting room. Fearing that if left as it was it would be recognized, he con-

Blackiston sued Jernegan for trespassing upon his grave. The case excited so much attention among the members of the legal profession that the bar association volunteered to furnish counsel for Jernegan's defense and retained their most brilliant member for the purpose. Blackiston conducted his own case.

"Your honor," he said in his opening remarks, "I shall proceed to show by competent witnesses that the defendant did with malice aforethought invade and trespass upon my grave, interfere with my repose, feloniously steal my body, place it in a bag and carry it to a dissecting room. He then and there was making preparations to take apart my members for the purpose of study when I returned to consciousness. This suit is brought with a desire to learn the legal status of a corpse. It is a principle of common law that there are no property rights in a dead body. No one owns it but itself. That it has legal rights has been established in the case of the estate of Swiback versus Oppenheim, wherein it was decided that the body of Swiback was a part of his estate, in which he had the same interest as in his real estate."

"Your honor," replied counsel for defense, "this being a friendly suit to establish a principle we admit without the fact being established by witnesses that the defendant did remove the body of the plaintiff from its grave, but we claim that the plaintiff, being legally dead, has no standing in this court."

"I propose," said Blackiston, "to try the case on that very issue. I therefore admit that in the eyes of the law I am dead. Nevertheless in a sense a corpse is a living person. It being the duty of the state under the law to protect the repose of the dead, it follows that the dead have rights. Therefore when a corpse is feloniously invaded in its own domicile, the grave, it must have a legal standing with the state to protect itself. If it has a legal standing against the state it must have such standing in court against an individual."

"There is no question," replied counsel for the defendant, "that the plaintiff is legally dead, nor is there any question that he is really living. Nevertheless I am considering him as a corpse resurrected, returned to life and with the right to establish his former legal identity. Since we are endeavoring to establish a principle of law let us admit that Blackiston has established such legal identity. In that case I think he would stand before the court as a resurrected living corpse, which, as was held in the case of Brickbat versus Cobbleston—"

At this point the court interrupted the learned counsel to say that the brain wear and tear of the case were so exhausting that he would adjourn the court for one hour for refreshment, recommending phosphoric foods calculated to restore the enormous cellular waste. When the court convened again his honor remarked:

"In order to proceed with this trial it must be admitted that the plaintiff has a standing in this court, and so the court holds."

"Very well," said Blackiston. "My standing before this court as a corpse having been admitted, I demand damages against the plaintiff for invading

Patience: Who's He?

The old "bred in the bone" Cornishman of upper Michigan is a character that once met is not soon forgotten. While he has a distinct sense of humor, he is funniest when he least intends to be, and this is due in no small degree to his peculiar dialect, the latter being not only difficult to understand, but still more so to reproduce. The following is typical: The boss went up in a raise where two of his old reliable workmen were drilling, greeting them with "'Ow she coming up, boys?" "Some slow, cap'n, some slow." "Well," said he, "ne'er mind, patience and perceiverance will put un through." And the captain walked on. Said one of the men in the raise, "'Enry, wo be this Patience and this Perceiverance?" "Blowed if I da knaw, lest be they taw bluddy Finlanders in tuther stowp."

Half an hour later found Henry and his partner demanding their pay up to date just as the captain stepped into the office. "Well, me sons, what's matter?" "W'ur leavin', cap'n. If yaw dha want they taw bluddy Finlanders to put un through you can 'ave 'ey. Patience and Perceiverance, 'ay? You can 'ave 'ey, you can 'ave 'ey."—Engineering and Mining Journal.

A Grouchy Clerk.

The clerk in the postoffice was grouchy. We suspected that he had been out late the night before, and we trod lightly and spoke gently, but in spite of our decent precautions he snarled at us. We decided that it would be better not to address him at all. So we approached the stamp window at which he presided and mutely pushed two copper pennies across the counter.

"Well, what do you want?" he growled, looking at the coppers and then at us.

"A house and lot," we stammered, taken off our guard, "but the bedroom windows must face the south, and the garden should"—

But he swore frightfully and, banding us a two cent stamp, merely exclaimed:

"Get out of the line; there are other customers!"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Wily Sexton.

Visitors to the Old North church are shown through the historic old building usually by an elderly man who seems obsessed with a love for the church. His fund of reminiscences is refreshing, and the most interesting thing he recounts is the story of how the lanterns were placed in the belfry. According to his version of the historic incident, the sexton overheard some English officers talking in the house he lived in and immediately hung the lanterns. Returning to his room, he saw that his shoes were caked with mud and hid them, replacing them with a dry pair. The officers, after they learned that a signal had been hung from the belfry, rushed to the room of the sexton, but, finding his shoes dry, became convinced that some one else had hung the lanterns and then locked all the doors of the edifice.—Boston Journal.

the court holds."

"Very well," said Blackiston. "My standing before this court as a corpse having been admitted, I demand damages against the plaintiff for invading the six feet of ground in which I as a dead man had an inalienable right."

"Your honor," quickly interposed counsel for the defense, "the plaintiff cannot claim damages, though his standing in court and the trespass is admitted, for since there is no property right in a corpse the law does not give a right to recover in a court for a violation of sepulture. If we admit that the plaintiff suing as a corpse has cause for action against a man for stealing himself—a corpse—the present action falls to the ground and can only be brought again as an action of one dead body against another, for which there is no law of the land that can compel an answer."

Blackiston now arose and delivered an argument that has since been considered a wonder by every member of the bar who heard it. But unfortunately the reporters, who were not skilled in legal lore and could not digest the arguments, had been sinking to slumber, and when the phenomenon arose to speak the last journalist had gone to sleep.

When the summing up had been concluded the judge announced that he would take a week to consider the case and would hand down a decision at the end of that period.

When the day came for him to read his decision the courtroom was crowded to overflowing. The judge looked ten years older than before the trial. He began to speak in a feeble voice, but gained strength as he proceeded. The lawyers and spectators listened patiently though eagerly till the gist of the opinion came in the last few words, "There is nothing in the constitution to enable a dead man to bring an action in a living court."

A mighty shout of "Recall him! Recall the stupid blunderer!" arose. And straightway those adverse to the opinion proceeded to unseat the judge.

The movement was successful, but the poor man died on the very day he was unseathed.

Boat Racing in the Old Days.

Boat racing was a very different affair from what it is now, when the first boat race between Oxford and Cambridge came off at Henley in 1829. Oxford won, wearing "blue checks" and sporting black straw hats with a broad blue ribbon, while Cambridge was in white with pink waist bands and high hats. The weights of the racing boats used at this time may be judged from the fact that when they were converted from eights to six oars, with seats for passengers added, they could easily carry twenty persons.—London Chronicle.

When Death Cools His Sting.

There is a curious superstition in Jamaica that if a death occurs in the house all the water in it is poisoned at once and must be thrown away, the reason given being that Death cools his "sting" after destroying life in the first water he finds, and as no one can tell—death being invisible—what far he may choose it is safest to throw it all away. Careful people to save trouble even carry all water out of the house immediately before a death is expected.

A Son of the Samurai

A Lesson From the East to the West

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Mr. Briscoe, though he would only have a Japanese servant, was not always good tempered. Something was wrong with his dinner, and it irritated him. Picking up a plate, he threw it at his cook.

Tado Hashojuri dodged Briscoe's carefully aimed plate, and the china crashed against the opposite wall, and the fragments tinkled to the floor.

"Mr. Briscoe is not satisfied with the dinner I have so carefully prepared," remarked the Japanese as he brought another plate and set it down before his master.

Ned Briscoe glared in astonishment at the oriental who had taken his reproof so calmly, or was it contempt in the oblique black eyes bent upon him?

Briscoe knew he had not acted like a gentleman, and it made him angry because he knew the reason why—the wine he had drunk exerted its usual quarrelsome effect upon him. If he was with friends when he took liquor in any form he was minus one friend when the next day dawned. When he dined alone it was the waiter, and when at home in his own apartment it was Tado, his cook, valet and general factotum, who bore the brunt.

"Huh," muttered Ned sulkily as Tado brought in a delicious salad. It was made of nuts and white grapes and was Briscoe's especial favorite. He trifled with it and refused anything more except a cup of black coffee. This he quaffed in two gulps and left the room.

He would have been angry if any one had told him it made him feel ashamed to see the imperturbable countenance of his cook staring at him.

"It's awful to be a cad and not be able to help it," groaned Ned as he ed from the room, only to appear at intervals during the meal, and when morning dawned he appeared not at all, and Briscoe ate at his club.

The idea of a trip to Japan appealed to Briscoe's jaded sense of enjoyment. He had never visited the orient, and it was only a few months after his valet's departure that Ned Briscoe found himself crossing the Pacific to Nippon's fairy islands.

He had been in Tokyo three weeks and had quite exhausted all the gayeties in the foreign quarter before he thought of Tado Hashojuri. Then it happened that he came across the neat card among the folds of his wallet.

"I've missed the services of a man," mused Briscoe, turning the paper over in his hands. "Suppose I look him up. Very likely he will be glad of a job with me. No one could shave me like Tado."

After a leisurely breakfast Briscoe called a ricksha man and gave him Tado's card.

"Take me to that place," he said, getting into the vehicle.

The man stared at the easy going American, and an added respect came into his voice and manner as he lifted the shafts and started down the long street that lifted into a hill in the distance.

It was an hour's ride at a swift trot, and the man between the shafts seemed tireless. Ned Briscoe felt rather bored at first, but presently the beauty of the suburban landscape and the manifestations of tireless industry as exhibited by the tiny farms scattered everywhere and yielding produce from every inch of soil set him to thinking.

He could see that each of the peasants bent above his daily toil was doing some share in the work of the universe. Soldiers' drilling barracks showed him where one might serve his country. All about him were tense, purposeful faces. He thought of the bored reflection that had met his own face in the mirror that morning.

Now they were passing beautiful country estates, and over high hedges he caught glimpses of gardens laid out in miniature reproductions of nature's wildest fancies.

Now the thought of Tado occurred to him.

"By Jove, he must be working out in one of these places!" he thought uneasily.

Nevertheless he said nothing, and when his ricksha finally turned into a gateway flanked by great stone lanterns he would not have been surprised if he had been whisked around to the kitchen entrance.

Instead of that, the vehicle drew up under the formal portico of a handsome dwelling, and an obsequious maidservant pushed back the paper door and invited him to enter the reception room.

Briscoe removed his shoes and thrust his feet into the straw slippers waiting in the veranda and followed the servant into the reception room. Here he waited while his card was carried to his late cook. He had hesitated about this ceremony. He had asked for Tado Hashojuri, and the maid had nodded and smiled and disappeared.

Presently she appeared and beckoned him to an inner guest room. Here the light was dimmer, but there was little Tado Hashojuri standing attired

A Story For Memorial Day

By Captain ARTHUR TRASK

"Grandpa," said a miss of sixteen, "I wish this year you would make the story of the war you tell us on Memorial day one about a Confederate. To us young ones the war is a matter of history, and we don't realize that those beside whom we are now living as friends were then our enemies. Now, tell us a story about a nice, brave Confederate."

"I understand just what you mean, my dear," replied the septuagenarian vet, "and appreciate it. Indeed, I rejoice at it. Since we are now one people it is fitting that we, especially you of the third generation of those born after the war, should feel no bitterness for a people who were our enemies half a century ago. And I am not surprised that you like to hear about them as well as about those who fought for the Union.

threw himself on the couch in his den. "I wonder what's the matter with me anyway?" Somehow the answer rang in his ears almost as if some one had heard his query and replied to it.

"Too much money, too little energy and perseverance, too lazy, too fond of pleasure, no sense of obligation to his fellow men or his country." Ned Briscoe knew it all and despised himself for it.

"What's the use of having money if I can't get some fun out of it?" he grumbled weakly, and that was always the way his conscience was driven into the background.

In the kitchen Tado Hashojuri was frowning over the fragments of the shattered plate. It had been a long time since Mr. Briscoe had thrown the companion plate at his cook, valet, etc., and the memory of the first insult had grown dim. Now it was revived as the sensitive Japanese gazed upon the porcelain.

"Wait, wait, wait! Some day I must teach this scallawag how gentlemen should be treated even in kitchens when much drink is full of wine," muttered Tado, with sudden incoherent rage bubbling over. He flung the fragments of the plate at his gas range, and there was another tinkling crash. He smiled with satisfaction. It had relieved his tension. Now he understood why Mr. Briscoe threw plates at him, but it did not remove the sting of indignation.

One day three months later Tado Hashojuri received a letter from his home in Japan, and straightway he packed his cheap American trunk, cleaned Briscoe's apartment from end to end, served a delicious dinner and at its close laid the key to the refrigerator at his master's elbow.

"I leave with much dissatisfaction all around," bobbed Tado solemnly.

"Huh?" demanded Briscoe, who was drinking nothing but water now.

"I go tonight after dishes are washed. I am needed at home," patiently explained Tado.

"Oh, well; why didn't you give me notice?" demanded Briscoe indignantly, and as the Japanese made no reply he continued, "I don't see that I am compelled to pay you wages when you are leaving me without notice."

Tado's eyes narrowed, but he only shrugged his narrow shoulders and turned away.

"Here!" thundered Briscoe, and tossed a yellow back upon the table.

"Thanks," returned Tado laconically. "Where do you live?" asked Briscoe, not as if he cared a hang whether his erstwhile servant lived or died.

"Tokyo, sir, Mr. Briscoe."

"I may be in Japan myself next winter. If you will give me your address, Tado, I'll look you up if I need a valet," remarked Briscoe patronizingly.

"Mr. Briscoe is most too kind," murmured Tado, with a smile in his eyes. He took from his pocket a neat white card inscribed with a few characters in Japanese.

"Most anybody can direct the honorable foreigner," he hinted and so faded.

him to an inner guest room. Here the light was dimmer, but there was little Tado Hashojuri standing attired in rich robes with a queer smile on his lips and an added dignity in his manner. He was talking to the American minister, whom Briscoe knew very well.

"Ah, my old friend, Mr. Briscoe," murmured Tado in his halting English and with a flash of white teeth at the newcomer. "Welcome to Nippon!"

"Thank you—much obliged, I'm sure," stammered Briscoe, quite taken aback by the evident prosperity of his late servant.

"If I may have one word with the baron—you will excuse us, Mr. Briscoe?" asked the American minister, and as Tado accompanied the diplomat to the door Ned Briscoe had time to do a little more thinking before his host returned.

"Well, Baron Tado," said Ned when Hashojuri returned to the room, "it seems I've been putting my foot in it all along. Please explain."

Tado did. He said he had gone to America to study the country and its people. Suddenly his father had died, and he had to return to Japan as the head of his house.

"I was much anger," he said politely, "at some plate episodes in our experience, and I think maybe when you come to Nippon I might revenge my honor, for I am the son of a samurai, Mr. Briscoe, and pass not insults! But when I returned to my own country, what I left behind, insults and all, seemed small and mean beside the great questions of war and one's country and life and death. So I forgot—and am your very good friend!" He held out his hand, and Briscoe was glad to clasp it.

Strange to relate, it was through the man who had one time been his valet and cook that Ned Briscoe reached a realization that he, too, had a country to serve in some capacity and that his wealth had been given him to use widely. In the case of Ned Briscoe it was an occasion when the east taught another lesson to the west.

million, but now a state which in that period of secession seceded from a state. The Allegheny mountains divide Virginia from West Virginia, and it was in these mountains that we were fighting. I was in the cavalry and did a good deal of scouting among these heights, from which I enjoyed some very beautiful views.

"The general who opposed us was a very active man. Indeed, he subsequently became one of the great leaders of the war, and many military men consider him to have been the one general of both sides who had in him the Napoleonic genius for war. If quick movement indicates such genius he certainly was in a smaller field the equal of Napoleon, for even the little Corsican could not have moved more rapidly, more unexpectedly or been in more places at the same time than Stonewall Jackson.

"Well, one day our general sent for me and told me he wanted me to find out where General Jackson was. He was reported to be at Romney, at Springfield and at Pawpaw. He couldn't very well be at all of them at the same time, and the general wanted to know where he was and if possible where he would be next.

"There was a mountain ridge running north and south directly to the west of these places, and, ascending it, I rode northeastward, with Romney and the other two places mentioned below me in the valley. Of course I couldn't see everywhere down there, and troops might be concealed by the trees and intervening heights. Near Springfield I concluded to descend with a view to getting a little closer to what might be going on. The mountain side was not to be passed over, especially on horseback, without going by a trail; but, having had a good deal of experience in mountaineering, I knew a trail when I saw it and, finding one, followed it.

"Reaching the valley, I struck a road. I knew it wasn't safe for me to remain on it for any length of time, so I chose an eminence near and a little above it where I could see and not be seen. There I dismounted behind a clump of low trees, tied my horse to one of them and waited.

"There was but one house in view, and that was a few hundred feet from the road and approached by a lane. I watched this house for evidence of something alive, for the place was lonely and I craved the sight of a human being. It was midsummer and everything was green. There were flower beds about the house, and presently I saw a young girl come out and begin picking some of the flowers. A girl in a flower garden has always been a pretty sight to me, and I watched this young woman with very pleasant sensations. I was tempted to go down and make her acquaintance, but this might interfere with my object, so I contented myself with looking at her, admiring her graceful carriage and the comfort her flowers appeared to give her. They seemed to be talking to her and she to be listening at what they said.

"While enjoying the sight I heard a clatter of horse's hoofs coming up the valley, and presently a horseman in gray uniform appeared. As soon as he reached the lane that led down to the house he turned into it. Catching sight of the girl, he took off his hat important dispatch, had informed its contents and she had perceived that if anything occurred his delivering it she would command for whom it was and deliver it verbally. The interpretation of the matter, of course, it was only a guess.

"The young soldier remained a few minutes with the girl, having taken her in his arms but she tried to disengage herself; but she clung to him, and it awhile before he could get her.

"This parting affected me for I was resolved to possess myself of the dispatch or was as he carried. This could be done without one of us other, and it was likely that, for he was unaware of the pose, while I could follow I necessary shoot him in the back.

"You may think, my dear, harbor such intentions was of me, but you must remember his life or mine was a mere compared with the lives of posing two armies. Besides, the cause each represented.

"The young man having seen himself from the girl, whom he was peering after him, I mounted my own horse and, screened by the road down the incline in the he had taken. We had a mile from the house before him.

"Hearing the clatter of hoofs behind him, he drew rein. He saw me with a carbine and heard me calling surrender.

"He must have known that was certain death to him, if depend on a revolver, and I of range, while I could shoot before he could come near me to render his weapon effective.

"You asked me to tell you Confederate, and I assure you was not only a brave young man, for rather than be captured the dispatch on him he chose. He made a dash at me, but had come twenty paces I and he fell from his horse, vtearing back in the direction which he had come.

"The young soldier was dead. I dismounted and stood beside him, wishing that the war was the past, as it is for you young I was in my own home engaged in peaceful avocations till he was still in death. I saw his coat, took out the read it.

"I saw that it was an order general commanding a detachment of General Jackson's forces junction with him that night ready to surprise us at dawn morning.

"Then I forgot everything carrying of the dispatch I turned to my general as soon as possible. Putting my foot in the stirrup, I swung myself into the saddle and rode southward. So intent the importance of what I that I did not think of the house below. As I approached

A COLLISION AT SEA.

The Scene as the Tai Hoku Plunged
Into the Depths.

The Tai Hoku was a steamship of 3,100 tons, built at Middleboro, England, for the Osaka Steam Navigation Co., says The Engineering News. Having sailed to Antwerp to complete her cargo, the steamship left that port on Aug. 6, 1897, for Japan. On the following Sunday she passed into a heavy fog, and at about 9 o'clock that night the steamer collided violently with another vessel. At first it was supposed that no serious damage had been done, but in half an hour five feet of water was reported in the forehold. The water gained at the rate of about two feet per hour,
and the ship gradually settled by the head.

At 4 a.m. on Monday there was sixteen feet of water in the forehold, and all the pumping power available
made no impression upon the inflow.
At 5 a.m. all hands took to the boats and pushed off a few hundred yards from the sinking steamship, and at 8.30 a.m. the party was rescued by the steamship Millfield. By this time the fog had cleared away, and the stern of the Tai Hoku could be seen gradually rising in the air. Shortly before 1 p.m. she began to roll heavily, and then she plunged and sank.
In the fifteen minutes previous to her final disappearance four photographs were taken.

When the Tai Hoku went down
there was, of course, considerable steam pressure in her boilers, possibly sixty or seventy pounds.
When the bridge collapsed, the siren and foghorn cords being attached to it, both the siren and foghorn sounded just as the vessel disappeared.
The third and final view shows, apparently, an explosion. But as a matter of fact, said an engineer who witnessed the accident and took the photographs, there is little doubt that when the water reached the boiler fires there was a sudden generation of steam and gas, which rushed with almost an explosive effect up the flues and smokestack, carrying with it quantities of soot, which remained suspended in the air for some minutes after the ship disappeared. There was not the least sign of the proverbial whirlpool when the ship went down, though there was abundant sur-

IN days of old, when knights were

When you attend right strictly to business and control your temper you don't have any time to get into any quarrel.

It is ill luck that can't raise any wind.

If one were not able to make capital out of calamity occasionally this dear old world would go to the bowwows much more rapidly than it is speeding
now.

The physician who knows enough not to get sick is never so foolish as to impart the knowledge to his acquaintances.

The fellow who is persuaded that everything is his own fault may lose his job often, but not because he sassed his boss.

Collecting damages may help some-

with getting busy to repair damages.

The odor of toll is far more inspiring
when it comes to establishing con-overcoming them.

Promiscuous.

The breezes kissed the gentle maid
And with her sunny hair
Rumped pleasantly a little while
And left her free of care.
But that's a way the breezes have.
They do not think it wrong
To throw a kiss to persons who May chance to come along.

At first and rather bashful blush
A person might declare
It would be fine to, as a breeze,
Go kissing here and there.
But when one thinks about the way
It takes them as they run
And kisses young and old and all,
That takes away the fun.

For breezes do not pick and choose
Or features closely scan.
They kiss a lot of ones who yet
Were never kissed by man.
They get the sour and the sweet,
The pretty and the shy,
For they must take them as they come
And every one supply.

But man is such a fickle one
He wants to pick and choose
And kiss the persons that he likes,
And other ones refuse,
And if he were a breeze, I fear,
Some ladies would be missed,
And quite a sorry lot of them
Would have to go unknissed.

Garrick's Wonderful Face.

Garrick had a poor opinion of the French actors of his day, and when in Paris for six months in 1763 to show what he could do without the aid of the usual accessories of the stage he gave private performances to audiences that quickly succumbed to the spell of his art. He told stories, gave scenes from Shakespeare and acted dramas in dumb show. There are familiar tales concerning his wonderful mobility of features and body, of his power to "create a new physiognomy which his friends did not recognize." There is the story, for instance, that Garrick posed to Hogarth for the portrait of Fielding after Fielding's death. And there is the other story that in sitting to Reynolds Garrick so completely changed his facial expression three times in succession that the artist flung down his brush and declared that he believed "he was painting from the devil." His French auditors were subjected to the same sensations.

His Hold on Fame.

Sir Henry Irving was playing his annual London engagement once when Nansen, then in the height of his fame as an arctic explorer, came back from an expedition in search of the north pole. The curtain was just about to rise one evening when Stoker came behind the scenes with news that Nansen was sitting in the royal box. Irving received the news in silence.

A few minutes later one of the members of the company bustled up to the star to tell him the same thing. Irving merely grunted. And right on the heels of this up came a fluttering woman super and said:

"Oh, Sir Henry, did you know the great Nansen was out front?"

"Nansen? Nansen?" said Irving as though he were trying to remember who this person Nansen might be. "Oh, yes—the chap who stands the cold so well!"—Saturday Evening Post.

President Chamberlin of G.T.P. Says Northern Route Is Cooler for Shipment of Grain—Little of Panama Protest Is Being Made by Canadian Roads—U. S. Senators Declare That Britain Is Right in Contention.

Washington, July 16.—Great Britain's protest that the United States has no right under the Hay-Pauncefote treaty to pass its own coastwise vessels free through the Panama Canal, while it collects tolls from British and other foreign ships, found emphatic support in the Senate yesterday.

Opening the fight over the Panama Canal bill sent to the Senate by the House, in which the free provision is an important feature, Senators Burton of Ohio, and Root of New York, outlined the ground upon which the opponents of free passage to American ships will fight their battle.

Both Senators declared Great Britain had surrendered important right at Panama held under the former Clayton-Bulwer treaty for the pledge of "equal treatment" to all ships, given by the United States in the existing Hay-Pauncefote treaty. The controversy hinges on the question of whether the United States in its pledge to treat the ships of "all nations" equally, meant to include vessels owned by its citizens.

Railways Not Interested.

Montreal, July 16.—That the question of rates through the Panama Canal has little interest for Canadian railways, was the rather surprising view expressed by President E. J. Chamberlin of the G. T. R., in an interview here yesterday after his western tour.

"I don't think the Canadian railways have had anything to do with the protest made by the British Government against discriminatory rates through the Panama Canal in favor of American ships," he said, "because in my opinion very little Canadian traffic will go by that route."

"My belief is that the life-blood of the Canadian railroads is the traffic east and west," he said.

Asked if the G.T.P. had ever contemplated running a line of steamships from Prince Rupert to Europe via the Panama Canal, Mr. Chamberlin replied in the negative, adding that he did not believe any other Canadian railway had contemplated such a move either. As regards the transportation of grain, he remarked that the whole of the Canadian crop of last year would have had to be dried before it could be transported by such a hot route as the Panama Canal.

The present route, he said, was much cooler and, therefore, more desirable, and the transshipping of the grain at Fort William, Georgian Bay, Montreal or other outlets all had the effect of drying it. It must be remembered that the Canadian farmer wanted to market his grain as soon as it was threshed; he could not wait to dry and store it.

Veteran Grants.

Ottawa, July 16.—The Fenian raid veterans are going to get their money after all without any more delay. Arrangements have been made whereby the necessary amount, which will be close upon a million dollars, will be taken out of consolidated revenue.

Veterans can secure certificates from the Militia Department, and upon presentation to the Department of Finance the $100 grant will be paid to them. Checks are being made out to-day. A large number of applications have been passed upon and it is expected that something like 4,000 grants will be paid out.

A great many applications are being received from persons who are laboring under the misconception that all those who turned out in '60-'70 are entitled to the grant, whether they saw active service or not. This, however, is a mistake, and only those whom the Department is assured saw active service will get the $100.

Winnipeg's Hundredth Birthday.

Winnipeg, July 16.—The one hundredth anniversary of Winnipeg's birth was celebrated yesterday by the laying of the foundation of a memorial monument to Lord Selkirk on the corner of Main and Notre Dame streets in the presence of a crowd of distinguished old-timers. The stone-laying ceremony was performed by the Duke of Connaught. Over one hundred descendants of the original settlers who came over with Lord Selkirk were present and were the guests of the exhibition board, together with the royal party.

as it was threatened; he could not wait to dry and store it.

Sir Wilfrid to Tour.

Ottawa, July 16.—There is considerable curiosity and speculation in political circles at the announcement that during the coming summer Sir Wilfrid Laurier is billed to speak at various picnics and political gatherings in Quebec and Ontario.

The leader of the Opposition left last night for his old home in Arthabasca, Que. Before going he intimated that he would attend a number of political gatherings during the latter part of the summer and the early fall.

This is looked upon as a deliberate move on the part of Sir Wilfrid to secure an opportunity to discuss at these meetings the naval policy of the Government should one be announced in the meantime, or at least as a desire on his part to investigate personally the sentiment towards it in Quebec, and also in Ontario, before deciding upon the stand which he will take when Parliament meets and the result of the present naval conferences announced.

Jealousy Upsets Revolt.

London, (via the frontier, July 15.)—The Government is now in possession of the complete plans of the royalists. These show that several regiments in Lisbon garrison were in league with them, and it was arranged that these troops should march into the streets and proclaim the re-establishment of the monarchy on the night that Capt. Couceiro, the royalist leader, crossed the frontier. The rivalry between Couceiro and one of the principal leaders at Lisbon, however, caused the conspiracy to fall through.

It is estimated that the royalists have lost 250 killed and 170 wounded. The Republican loss is heavy, but is not known exactly, as the Minister of War refuses to make public the casualty lists.

Rome Claims Another Win.

Rome, July 16.—A despatch from Gen. Garioni says that the whole division under his command attacked and captured Sidi Ally at dawn yesterday after six hours' fierce engagement with large Turkish forces from Regdaline and Zoara to the west of Tripoli. The Turks, according to the despatch, suffered enormous losses, and are now in full retreat.

CONVINCED OF DANGER

Canadians Certain That Larger Navy Is a Necessity.

Unofficial Statement Made In London Declares That Hon. Mr. Borden Has Carefully Probed the Demand For Naval Aid and Has Been Given All the Facts—France Keeping a Keen Eye on Negotiations.

London, Eng., July 16.—(C. A. P. Cable.)—A statement regarding the progress of the negotiations between the Canadian Ministers and the Imperial defence committee, given to the Canadian Associated Press by an apparently well-posted informant, is as follows:

"If the Canadian Ministers were in a position to speak, there is not the slightest doubt they would say that the aims of Great Britain with regard to naval requirements, modeled mostly on German expansion at sea, which have been the keynote of representations made by British Ministers, have been made in a most conclusive manner. Canadians are absolutely convinced that there is danger in prospect.

"Hon. Mr. Borden particularly, it is learned, put a series of questions in order to elucidate the real inwardness of the naval menace and requirements. He took nothing for granted, and, as a result, voluminous, vouched-for facts are now in his possession, including technical explanations from navy experts dealing with the strategic position and structural recommendations with regard to the type of ships required.

"What form aid will take has not been decided, but the question will be submitted at meetings beginning to-day at which the naval experts will be present.

"It is generally believed in inner circles that the granting to Canada and other dominions of a place on a remodeled committee on Imperial defence is practically settled as a matter of principle, but details have to be worked out. Just as the Canadian Premier declared that Canada would not be an adjunct of the Empire, so he has insisted on assurances of representation being given.

"Much conjecture surrounds the visit of Canadian Ministers to Paris on the 27th. No doubt while there, unofficial enquiries will be made with regard to the relations between France and Germany. Having in mind the entente between Britain and her neighbor across the channel, and the community of interest involved, Canadians are assured of a warm welcome. Their arrival in London has not been unheeded in France, and the importance and significance of the moral force surrounding the prospective assistance of British colonies to the Mother Country is fully recognized in French circles, both in London and Paris."

Pall Mall Gazette's Guess.

London, July 16.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The Pall Mall Gazette publishes an apparently inspired message which says the naval arrangement will provide for $7,500,000, as a minimum contribution to the navy. In return Canada hasn't put forward any requests, but it is understood that the British Government will do its best to meet Canada's requirements in re-

TWO OLD FRIENDS.

THE tuneful tale of Jack and Jill Has served us long and well. New generations come along And on it learn to spell. They get the story of these two Of very great renown. When they have children of their own To them they hand it down.

Can you recall—just pause and think— A day so long ago That you were not informed as to The details of their woe? How after water up the hill They went and tumbled down; How Jill escaped without a scratch To match Jack's fractured crown?

Just where they lived we do not know. As to their other name— If it was Johnson, Jones or Brown, To us it's all the same. If Jack got well we never heard— What's more, we never will— Nor if Jack's father found it hard To pay the doctor's bill.

This simple little incident Is all we have been told About these two that we have known Since we were one year old. They might have told us, anyway, If Jill was sent along To get the water all alone Till Jack got well and strong.

Not Much Change.

"How did they make love in the stone age?"

"How should I know?"

"I suppose the man with the most rocks got the girl."

Persistency.

"Mrs. Muchmarried is making a collection of allmonies, isn't she? She must be dreadful mercenary."

"Oh, no, I don't think that."

"Then why is she marrying and divorcing so much? I hate to see a woman act that way."

"She hates to be benten. She started out in good faith to be happy, though married, and she says she is determined to keep on trying until she reaches that state."

A MARTYR TO HAY FEVER

"Fruit-a-tives" Cured After 15 Years' Suffering

CORNWALL CENTRE, ONT.,

NOVEMBER 27th 1911.

"I was a martyr to Hay Fever for probably fifteen years and I suffered terribly at times. I consulted many physicians and took their treatment, and I tried every remedy I heard of as being good for Hay Fever but nothing helped me.

Then I heard of "Fruit-a-tives" and decided to try them, and I am thankful to say that this remedy cured me completely.

To every sufferer from Hay Fever, I wish to say—"Try Fruit-a-tives". This medicine cured me when every other treatment failed, and I believe it is a perfect cure for this dreadful disease—Hay Fever"

MRS. HENRY KEMP.

The real cause of Hay Fever is poisoned blood, due to the faulty action of the bowels, kidneys and skin.

"Fruit-a-tives" cleans the blood by regulating bowels, kidneys and skin—and thus relieves the excessive strain on the nervous system. Try "Fruit-a-tives".

H. B. Ames' Yacht Stranded.

Port Hood, July 16.—The sailing ship Manona owned by H. B. Ames, M.P., Montreal, struck a ledge at the southern end of Port Hood Island, Cape Breton, on Saturday night and foundered.

Mr. Ames and party, consisting of Mr. Middlebro, M.P., Owen Sound, Ont.; Dr. Wood, Brooklyn, N.Y., and Mr. Sherrard, Montreal, were rescued by boats and landed at Port Hood Island.

The party were cruising from Montreal to Cape Breton, thence to Labrador, for a couple of months. They carried provisions, etc., enough for the complete trip, and were to be joined by their wives in a day or two.

Well Killed Sixty Children.

Montreal, July 16.—The mayor of Ste. Cecillie yesterday applied to the city for water, which, he said, was necessary to stop the rapid wiping out of the child population of the village, which has about 300 inhabitants all told. He said the village used to get water from a river owned by a power company. This was stopped and the people had recourse to a well, as a result of which sixty children have died within two weeks. Water was promised the municipality.

tribution to the navy. In return Canada hasn't put forward any requests, but it is understood that the British Government will do its best to meet Canada's requirements in regard to certain transportation matters, such as the granting of a subsidy towards a steamship line between Canada and the West Indies also a subsidy towards an all-red route steamship line, which has already occupied public attention in both hemispheres. In the latter case, the sum suggested was $1,250,000 a year. It would be a condition for the all-red steamship route that the money shall not be given to any line now in existence.

There must, says The Gazette, be an entire scheme for the fast steamers, not merely between Great Britain and Canada, but also between Canada and Australia.

Sir Thomas Reticent.

Montreal, July 16.—Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, who returned yesterday from St. Andrew's, when asked about the rumor that the Canadian Pacific was to get a million dollars a year as a subsidy for a fast cruiser steamer service, replied, "There is nothing of the kind of which the C.P.R. has been advised."

Sir Thomas, on his return from England, admitted that something of the kind had been talked over, but said there was no information to give out until Premier Borden had returned from London.

In shipping circles it has since been rumored that the C.P.R. is to build four vessels of 25 knots each for a fast weekly service, the vessels to be of the three-funnel type, with cruiser sterns and capable of being converted into formidable fighting machines.

Mother and Babe Killed.

New York, July 16.—Mrs. Kelly Kelly, 28 years of age, is dead and her two-year-old baby boy is dying in a hospital as the result of injuries sustained when both were impaled yesterday on an iron picket fence as they fell from a fourth storey window in their home in West 12th street.

Mrs. Kelly fell in a futile attempt to save her child, which had crept to the window and lost its balance in leaning out. The mother died on the way to hospital and the child has a fractured skull and cannot recover.

Death of John Beatty.

Sarnia, July 16.—John D. Beatty, an old and respected resident of this town, and whose name was widely known with that of his brother, the late James Beatty, as founders of the Beatty Steamship Line, which is now the Northern Navigation Co., died on Sunday evening after a short illness, at the age of 74 years.

He was for twenty years general manager of the steamship line, and for a number of years president of the Sarnia Street Railway and active in civic affairs in the town in general.

BEFORE TREATMENT

AFTER TREATMENT

Peter E. Summers relates his experience: "I was troubled with Nervous Debility for many years. I lay it to indiscretion and excesses in youth. I became very despondent and didn't care whether I worked or not. I imagined everybody who looked at me guessed my secret. Imaginative dreams at night weakened me—my back ached, had pains in the back of my head, hands and feet were cold, tired in the morning, poor appetite, fingers were shaky, eyes blurred, hair loose, memory poor, etc. Numbness in the fingers set in and the doctor told me he feared paralysis. I took all kinds of medicines and tried many first-class physicians, wore an electric belt for three months, but received little benefit. I was induced to consult Drs. Kennedy & Kennedy, though I had lost all faith in doctors. Like a drowning man I commenced the New Method Treatment and it saved my life. The improvement was like magic—I could feel the vigor going through the nerves. I was cured mentally and physically. I have sent them many patients and continue to do so.

A Popular School.

Among the Commercial Schools of the Dominion, the Peterborough Business College, Peterborough, is freely acknowledged to hold the foremost position. It is the largest and most widely attended Business College in Eastern Ontario and is affiliated with the commercial Educators Association of Canada. The management of this chain trained last year over two thousand young people and placed them in excellent positions. We have had thirty years experience; consequently, ambitious young people, who are desirous of securing a business education and taking a good position, would do well to write at once. Hundreds of young people are studying at home preparatory to entering Business College next fall or winter, and they are paying for their course at their own convenience.

In 1842 she was married to William Shibley, who predeceased her twenty-one years ago. The late Mrs. Shibley was about the oldest resident around Bath. Surviving her are three sons and one daughter: W. H., of Louisville, Ky.; Rev. Samuel, of Kingston; James, of Bath, with whom she lived.

Buy Gunn's kettle rendered pure leaf lard.

It is sure to please, it's a drawing card; All other lard it does excel. Speaks for itself, if once I sell. It makes such flakey crust for pie, Such pastry makes you wink you're eye. It lacks that rank and rancid taste, No other lard can take its place; Cheap compositions are an awful fake, Buy kettle rendered for dear wife's sake, Its excellent qualities will never fail, Try Gunn's lard in that blue tin pail.

AVOID FAMILY DISPUTES.

Hundreds of Families Disrupted by Neglect to Make a Will.

It is unfortunate that families should be broken up and life-long enmities engendered over the division of estates, and it is generally over trivial amounts.

The rich man makes his will and avoids disagreements among his heirs. It is the man with only a few hundred, or a few thousand, who neglects to make a proper will. There might be some excuse if it were necessary to employ a lawyer and go to a large expense; but it is inexcusable for any person to fail to make a will when a BAX Will Form can be provided for 35 cents.

The BAX Will Forms are copyrighted and indisputable and with each one is furnished a specimen will properly filled out, and full instructions for your guidance. It is necessary, however, to watch for the name "BAX" on the form.

For sale by all druggists and stationers, or sent on receipt of 35 cents by the BAX Will Form Company, 280 College street, Toronto. For sale by A. E. Paul, Napanee.

The late Mrs. Shibley was of a quiet and retiring disposition, and lived especially for her children and her home. She maintained her mental faculties until the last. The funeral took place on Thursday morning.

Old Hay Bay, Church Re-opening.

A new wharf thirty feet wide extending into about seven feet of water giving good accommodation for bay steamers to land passengers, has been erected on Hay Bay, close to the old Adolphustown Methodist Church, giving any church picnic the chance of a comfortable landing. The grounds have been fenced, and the church will be re-opened on Monday, August the 12th, when two thousand people are expected to be on hand to enjoy the occasion and have a picnic at the same time. Rev. Dr. Burwash, Chancellor of Victoria University, and the presidents of the Toronto and Bay of Quinte Conferences with others will be the speakers. The Prince Edward County old boys, with the Picton people, will have an excursion down the Bay, leaving Picton at 9 a. m., and returning early enough to catch the train for Toronto by the C.N.R. A big excursion is also expected from Napanee and Deseronto.

Presentation and Address.

On the eve of Mr. and Mrs. Egerton VanLaven leaving Yarker to reside in Napanee they were presented with the following address and a handsome Morris chair:

To Mrs. Egerton L. VanLaven,

Yarker, Ont., 24th June, 1912.

Dear Mrs. VanLaven:—How often when we reflect on the fact that we are alone in the world, do we remember how we have found comfort in each others sympathy and counsel, and joined hand in hand to walk together down the declivity of life. In assembling together to-night, we your Church and Sunday School Choirs, with whom you have so often done, feel that we are being left quite alone, the course before us appearing a blank; a flock without a Shepherdess. Hand in hand have you, by your glad faith and hope, been the means of binding us together to share our mutual joys and griefs. With a whole-hearted purpose you have entered into the duties and pleasures of the past, meeting each day more cheerfully and with greater desires. In the service of song your sympathetic rendering and spiritual interpretation has appealed to us as "the very voice of the Comforter. We congratulate you on the possession of a gift granted to so few, and we also felicitate Mr. VanLaven and family on the fact, that in the discharge of their duties, their noble discretions are so ably sustained by those of a talented wife and mother. When in your new home, twilight falls, we ask you to seek repose in this Morris chair, our gift to you, and may the consolation you so often have given to each of us be fully recompensed to you.
